Group Organizes To Form Veterinary School

CHARLOTTESVILLE - A citizens group organized "to better inform Virginians of the critical need for a school of veterinary medicine in the state" has been formed here, its chairman announced recently.

The organization of the group, the Citizens Committee for a Veterinary School, was announced by Roie M. Godsey, senior vice president of the Virginia National Bank and chairman of the Virginia Agricultural Foundation.

Godsey said he had agreed to serve as chairman "because I am convinced that once the people of our state realize how important a school of veterinary medicine will be to the Virginia economy, and to their health, we'll develop a veterinary school."

Announcement of the organization of the Citizens' Committee was authorized earlier this week by the Committee's 10-member Executive Board, Godsey said. Approximately 40 persons, representing a wide range of agricultural and animal-related groups throughout Virginia, were initially organized as the Committee, he noted.

"We feel strongly that Virginians generally are not fully aware of the importance of veterinary medicine to the economy, and of the role of veterinary medicine in the protection of human health . . . consequently there is not adequate public recognition of the crucial need for a school of veterinary medicine in Virginia," Godsey said.

Members of the group's Executive Board were identified, in addition to Godsey, as Dr. Herbert W. Kelly, a Newport News veterinarian; R. Bruce Hogue of Ivy, chairman of the Virginia Agri-Business Council, Robert B. Delano of Richmond, president of the Virginia Farm Bureau, and Herbert W. Stuart of Batesville, president of the Virginia Horse Council.

Also, Henry Matthiessen, Jr. of Hume, a beef cattle producer; Dr. Glenn R. Noffsinger of Annandale, president of the Virginia Veterinary Medical Association; Galen B. Bruhaker, a Rocky Mount dairyman; Mrs. T. E. Cunnings of Boones Mill, president of the Virginia Extension Homemakers Council, and Mrs. John A. Ewald, Jr. of Ivy, an attorney and horse breeder.

Among the other organizations represented on the Committee, Godsey said, are the Virginia Dairyman's Association, the Virginia Poultry Federation, the Old Dominion Kennel Club, the Virginia Cat Fancier Association, the Virginia Purebred Livestock Association, Inc., and Southern States Cooperative.

Godsey said the group is well aware of the state's budget problems and the immediate difficulties in the initial funding of the proposed veterinary school at Virginia Teeh. "But the fact that we are in a period of economic restraint doesn't make the very serious need for the veterinary school go away,and we are prepared to stay with this effort until we have a veterinary school at VPI," he said.

The 1974 General Assembly appropriated $225,000 for initial planning for the proposed school at VPI, following the recommendations of a legislative study commission. The 1975 General Assembly reenacted the authorization, but changed the appropriation to special funds rather than general tax funds.

The group earlier had invited VPI President William E. Lavery, Dean Richard B. Talbot, and several other Virginia Tech officials to meet with it and review the planning for the proposed school, Godsey said.

I like to fertilize pastures in the fall - - - it's a good time to build up food reserves in the plant's root system. Spring fertilizer often forces a super abundance of growth that isn't always utilized efficiently.

Corn variety information is beginning to come across my desk and I suppose that many growers will be selecting varieties in the coming weeks to insure a firm supply of seed. Here's a though to ponder - - - Johnsongrass continues to spread. It's already a major problem on many farms. If you have Johnsongrass it's an almost sure bet that your corn crop will be susceptible to maize dwarf mosiac (MDM). So, if you have Johnsongrass, you should seriously consider one of the MDM resistant varieties. MDM is a silent reducer of corn yields on many farms. Think about your situation.

1976 will be a time to become more agressive in our efforts to control Johnson-grass.
